Suppose we have a bunch of usernames and passwords for some sites that we access frequently. We may also have a bunch of usernames and passwords for other sites that we access occasionally. But we still have to go through the painful process of forgetting all of these usernames and passwords. On top of that, many of the web sites that we use have the annoying habit of requiring new passwords (also known as password resets) after a certain time period. Thankfully, after many years of hoping that someone would make a browser plugin that would automate all of these tedious and painful tasks, this is now possible. Many web sites that allow us to reset our passwords let us specify a username and a password. This is great, because often times we can use the username and password we choose for a web site on other web sites. How to login with android devices youtube video downloader.
