The new tool has its own undo and split option and an Eraser tool is now context sensitive, meaning it has a different tool specifically for erasing out of context areas. There's also an option that places the slider on the center of the histogram. Other settings defined in the Exposure Adjustment panel include Protect, Protection, White and Black Points, plus Fix Shadow, Auto Detail and Auto Levels.

For example, you can adjust the brightness & contrast, repair color, or invert colors all with a single click, then save your changes and apply them to multiple images simultaneously or on a single image. You can then manipulate any of the selected shapes to move, scale, or rotate them. Great for creating circles, squares, triangles, and more. Once you have your shape, you can then duplicate it again to continue creating more shapes. To apply effects to imagery, you can use a variety of filters and adjustment layers. You can also add a special effects layer over other layers. These effects help you add depth to your finished image, and, as well as applying transparency or making a picture look slightly grainy or textured.
