known fact that every single new version of the .NET Framework (or Framework) brings new changes. Maybe the changes are minor, maybe they are not, but we're talking about the .NET Framework. From the fourth version

(4.5) on, which was released in January of 2012, every new version of the framework has been incompatible with the older versions. And, since .NET Framework 4.5 is still the latest version on the market, it means that your application developed on this version is not compatible with older versions. And that's a very bad thing.
