After an update to MacOS Sierra and the new Photoshop CC, resume from work has gone away. Clearly, I've got the same problems. This makes me feel very sad. That's even more of a problem, because it's the same with Lightroom (I have CC and 5.2). Fortunately, I was able to find the answer. You need to change this in preferences: Edit > Preferences > Processing. There you'll see "Resume from work". Set it to "Always" and then save the changes. While the software is not perfect, it is more than adequate for most people editing images. I think a lot of people think it is Photoshop, so if you are editing a lot of images and don't know how to use a more high level tool then this is the software for you. You get what you pay for. I expected more from this product than I received. If you are a professional photographer you probably get what you are paying for along with the work that went into it. I use Photoshop CS5 on a daily basis as a professional designer. The interface was at times painfully slow, and to make matters worse, I would find that a given task would either become slowed to a crawl, or simply disappear. These problems persisted throughout the entire time I've been using it. On my iMac, each of the following Photo, Image, and FFT searches would take 20+ minutes or more:

- Importing and Developing
- Export and Organize
- Create Smart Objects

The update was accompanied by quite a few improvements in Bridge, including a new Preview panel, which will show you thumbnails of the images your originals, as well as the combined image with the adjustments you've made. Another new view is the Raw To Tagged release, which creates a JPEG copy of your image with the data "tagged" in the file. For example, by creating this view, you can save this JPEG as the final file and do any further color correction in Photoshop. You can also store the JPEG in a slide deck and later edit the detail way you like.

It's a series of pictures stitched into a super-high-res image and presented on the cover of National Geographic.
