The identification of patients with primary hepatobiliary disease can be challenging. This article describes 2 patients in whom the overlapping symptoms of cholestasis, pruritus, and fatigue led to the diagnosis of tubular glucose-6-phosphatase (G6Pase) deficiency, an autosomal recessive disorder resulting in a very poor prognosis. To our knowledge, this is the first case report describing novel symptoms in a patient with G6Pase deficiency, and describes a therapeutic intervention that was proven to be effective in treating some of the metabolic manifestations. A 34-year-old woman and a 41-year-old man presented to their physician with persistent fatigue, sleepiness, and itching. Physical examination revealed severe muscle wasting with prominent biceps and quadriceps and valgus deformities of the knees. Urinalysis, blood, and liver biopsy confirmed the diagnosis of severe cholestasis and fatty liver disease. Abdominal magnetic resonance imaging showed hepatomegaly and muscle atrophy. Genetic screening indicated a G6Pase deficiency in both patients. G6Pase activity of liver and
